

LED-ZEPPELIN

Even though all the albums of Led Zeppelin till 1975 are relevant, one of the most is "Led Zeppelin IV" (1971). In it, the British's exposed their style, which was a fusion of hard rock, folk and blues. This album includes songs like "Black Dog", "Rock and Roll" and the mystic "Stairway To Heaven". At that moment the band was in their best moment, at the top of the big leagues, however, around 1975 things started to go bad.

First, Robert Plant and his wife Maureen Wilson got in a terrible car crash. Later, the little son of Plant, Karac, died at only six years old because of a stomach infection. The singer fell into a deep depression and the band was off the stages for a long season. After this turbulence, Led Zeppelin backed the live performances and in 1979 published "In Through The Out Door", their last work. On September 25th of 1980, John Bonham passed away after a strong drunkenness. This fact marked the final of the band.

Despite the passing of the years, Led Zeppelin continues to be an authentic referent of Rock and their songs are sung by the new generations. Singularity maybe would be the best word to define this band, but it's much more than that. All the members of Led Zeppelin have something special, they were ones of the best in their instruments. Watching their concerts is such an electrifying experience, like so much talent together was too good to be real. I wonder how it would have been to see them live.

stairway to heaven

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xbhCPT6PZIU>

